- A: Good morning. East Side Animal Hospital.
B: Hi. I'd like to bring in my cat for a check-up.
A: Of course. Is this your first time calling us?
B: Yes, a friend of mine recommended your clinic. She said her dog had surgery there and your staff were really kind.
A: That's very nice to hear. So, your cat needs a check-up. Is there anything wrong?
B: Not really, but she hasn't been eating very well lately. I just want to make sure that everything is okay.
A: I understand. We have some availability tomorrow afternoon or Friday morning. Which do you prefer?
B: (1). I'm working tomorrow, but I can come Friday.
A: All right, I'll put you down for Friday at 10:30 a.m. What's your cat's name?
B: Her name is Coco. She's six years old.
A: And is Coco up to date on her vaccinations?
B: I think so. I'll bring her records with me.
A: Great. Please also bring a sample of her food, in case we need to check for allergies.
B: Oh, I hadn't thought of that. OK, I will.
A: Thank you. We'll see you and Coco on Friday.
B: Thanks. See you then.

問題 6 次の記事を読んで、下の問いに答えなさい。

SANTIAGO (Reuters) — Standing no taller than a house cat, the pudu — the world’s smallest deer — is inching¹ closer to endangered status on Chile’s southern Chiloe archipelago², threatened (1) a rising toll³ of car collisions and dog attacks, according to veterinarians⁴ and conservationists⁵.

Chiloe lies just off the coast of southern Chile and is home to dense forests, small rural communities and a fragile population of pudus that conservationists say is rapidly shrinking.

Dozens of pudus have been reported killed or (2) on Chiloe’s main island this year. The Chiloe Silvestre Wildlife Center has treated 18, with half injured by dogs and a third hit by vehicles, according to head veterinarian Javiera Lopez.

“Around 50 pudus arrive injured each year, which is a high number for such a vulnerable⁶ species,” Lopez said.

“It’s only a matter of time before they’re reclassified (3) endangered and eventually critically endangered.”

Javier Cabello, veterinarian and founder of the Chiloe Silvestre NGO, said the pudu’s tiny size makes it especially vulnerable.

“They’re only 45 centimeters tall — compare that to an elk or deer, which can grow to over two meters,” Cabello said.

With their wide eyes, delicate legs and timid⁷ nature, pudus are no match for speeding cars or aggressive dogs. Pregnant females are particularly at risk in winter and spring.

According to a government conservation report, there’s no official count of the southern pudu, (4) is found in the wild in Chile and Argentina. The total population is estimated to be around 10,000, with a large number living on Chiloe Island.

Natalia Duran, from the animal health unit at Chile’s National Zoo, said the island’s pudu population was declining, although the population on the mainland remained stable.

“That’s why, as a zoo, our educational role and our role in teaching people can still contribute to protecting the remaining population of this very charismatic little deer,” she said.

Proposals that have been put forward to help the pudus include road signs, speed bumps and a new ‘Pudu Law’ to curb free-roaming dogs in rural areas.
